War and Insurance

Date: September 5, 2025 (Friday)

Time: 6pm - 7pm

Venue: Academic Conference Room, 11/F Cheng Yu Tung Tower
The University of Hong Kong

War causes devastating effects not only to the parties directly involved but also to those seeking to remain neutral. One such consequence of Russia's invasion of Ukraine was the loss of leased aircraft that were not returned by Russian airlines. In Aercap Ireland Ltd v AIG Europe Ltd [2025] EWHC 1430 (Comm), Butcher J held that liability for these losses lay with the war risks insurers, not the all risks insurers. His detailed judgment addressed several key issues in aviation insurance, including the scope of contingent and possessed cover, the definition of loss, the relevance of the 'grip of the peril' doctrine, and whether deprivation of possession alone constitutes a loss. The judgment also examined the meaning of restraint and detention, the proximate cause of the loss—whether it was a commercial decision by the airlines or an act of the Russian government—and the impact of US and EU sanctions on the insurers' liability. Professor Gürses will provide an overview of these critical issues in insurance and marine insurance law in light of this decision.
